Doesn't It Commend Itself?

It's a strange notion that—of puffing up a mean price for an unknown quality.

As if there was some virtue in figures to impart eyesight to you—of what the cloth looked like, what sort of workmanship they paid for, how it would wear. There isn't.

The best business wisdom concerns itself with selling the customer the best quality he wants to buy—not the meanest.

He sets the amount he wants to spend in his own mind. It helps him to spend it for the best goods.

That's business wisdom! That's our plan!

We make the clothing. We invite you to look at it, inside and out; to judge it with your eyes open and goods in hand.

There isn't a profit made of it by anybody but us. We deal directly with you. There's nothing to equal getting manufacturer and wearer together for putting prices down.

We know they'll be satisfactory when you see the goods.

Special Cablegram to the Post-Dispatch.
Paris, November 21.—The situation remains unchanged. The various parties held meetings yesterday and discussed matters. Great confusion prevails. M. Grevy called together the Royer, Floquet, Clemenceau, Bouvier, Ferry, Goussier and Freydet to consult whether he should resign, with the purpose, it is said, that if they should decide that he must not resign, then he would proceed to form a new Cabinet.

THE INDEPENDENTS.
A meeting of the Independent Deputies of the Left was also held yesterday. M. Goussier, Ribot, Lockroy and Carnot were present. It was decided not to take any part in the proposed plenary conference of the groups of the Left unless the programme previously agreed upon for the conference was dropped.

THE REPUBLICAN INTERVIEW.
The Republic's interview with President Grevy, in an interview with M. De Freydet, declared that he would not yield to the present unconstitutional agitation, nor would he resign. He did not ask M. De Freydet to form a Cabinet. Speaking of several Deputies of the Left, he said that he must not resign, then he would proceed to form a new Cabinet.

THE STEAMER W. A. SCHULTEN COLLIDES WITH THE ROSA MARY.

Over One Hundred Lives Lost—Capt. Taat Remains at His Post and Goes Down With His Ship—Eighty of the Passengers Saved—Bodies Washed Ashore—Statements of the Officers of Both Vessels—List of the Passengers.

LONDON, November 21.—The most deplorable accident that the people of Dover ever saw occurred Saturday night at about 11 o'clock, when the steamer W. A. Scholten was sunk in a collision with another large vessel, supposed to have been the Rosa Mary. The accident occurred a few miles off the Dover pier in a thick fog. The Scholten had left Rotterdam Saturday morning with 220 persons on board. She was proceeding along slowly in the impenetrable mist, when all at once she was struck on the port bow, an immense gaping wound being made, into which the water rushed with the force of a torrent. The passengers had nearly all retired, but were all aroused by the collision.

THE FEARFUL SHOCK.
and, rushing upon the deck in the scantiest garments, made a scene of agonized horror never to be forgotten. The head of the ship was gradually sinking slowly but surely the frightened beings felt themselves slipping toward the sea, colder and colder they grew, but still the icy water surging beyond gave promise of a chillier embrace. A rush was made for the boats, but only two were found to be serviceable and into this the humanity piled like scared sheep. The officers were cool and calm. Capt. Taat never lost his head, but the crew caught the passengers' fears and acted like wild men. There were only a few minutes for the screaming of the women, the prayers of the pious and the wild curses of the men. Then there was a hush, the water boiled white over the gunwale, and

and on the black waves floated the white-robed figures. Farther and farther apart floated the ship's lost of lumber to be thrown overboard and on these frail supports a number of half-frozen swimmers, whose hands were frozen to their supports.

PICKING UP SCORNS.
The passengers were nearly all Germans, but a few were English. This little group clustered together at the command of a girl, who said she was a stewardess. The water broke up the little group, but two or three were saved. The water being calm and though at one time there was a spark of hope, the physicians soon gave it up and began to work at the shore. The bodies were washed ashore at intervals of a few minutes. The bodies were washed ashore at intervals of a few minutes. The bodies were washed ashore at intervals of a few minutes.

Dr. and Mrs. Edmonds of Washington Territory, had issued invitations to the marriage of their daughter, Miss Edmonds, to the Rev. J. H. Walker of Kentucky, the ceremony to be performed at the residence of the bride, 1014 Washington avenue, on the afternoon of Thanksgiving Day.

Mr. Thomas D. Accompanied by her brother, Mr. James D. McKay of San Francisco, Cal., spent several days in the city with her father, Mr. J. H. Edmonds, and her daughter is attending Daughters' College.

Miss Edmonds is a bride of the first class, and the Southern cities are returning home early in January.

A quiet but interesting wedding took place on Wednesday evening at the residence of Mr. William J. Marquis of 816 Mound street, the bride being Miss Edmonds, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. J. H. Harrison Campbell of Jackson, Mo. The bride, a pretty blonde maiden, was dressed in a gown of white satin, trimmed with deep lace, beneath whose and floating folds of which white satin she wore a light blue silk dress with ornament, and which she carried a bunch of white roses.

The bridegroom, Mr. J. H. Marquis, who also wore a gown of pure white, with garniture of white satin, was accompanied by his father, determined by the grandfather of the bride, Rev. J. H. Walker, to perform the ceremony. The bride received a great many beautiful and costly presents in token of the high esteem in which she is held by her friends.

Dr. and Mrs. Campbell left at six o'clock for the city of St. Louis, and Cape Girardeau, the groom's gift to his bride.

This morning at the Convent of the Visitation, Twenty-first street and Cass avenue, the ceremonies of reception and profession was celebrated. The chapel was filled with a fine assembly of friends and relatives of the young ladies who took the part of principals. There was hardly standing room in the aisles for a child, as the three candidates were exceptionally popular and in this, the most important step of their lives, they were aided and comforted by the sympathy and consultations. The choir, composed of the pupils of the convent, sang the "Veni Creator" at the beginning of the ceremony with fine effect, the voices blending

District Court that day. Judge Thayer waited for them until after 4 o'clock, received their report and discharged them with the understanding that they wished to return to their homes immediately. The Judge, if he retained any recollection of the members of the jury, has been surprised to see in the corridors about his court-room this morning several members of the jury, who, after having been informed of a buried past there walked witnesses who had been summoned before the grand-jury yesterday. These jurors and witnesses were by no means surprised by the fact that after having appeared from the jury, had been summoned to appear to serve as jurors or give testimony in the case of the woman who had killed herself. Their services rendered and discharges given they were unable to return to their homes until after 10 o'clock. The warrants given them were practically worthless, for the reason the Nazis had failed to pay out, and the warrants are not transferable.

"Did Mrs. Quinn have money on her when she left the office?"

"Yes, at least $100," he was told so, but she was required to turn that back into the Treasury."

"Would it not have been better then if she had remained in office until your requisition had been honored and money placed to your credit?"

"That could not be. As soon as I qualified I was bound to enter upon the duties of the office; before I could qualify I could not make a requisition for m-money. The same difficulty would arise, no matter what the cause in. The only question was which jury should suffer delay in payment. The jury was referred to the grand jury until January before entering the office, but the District Attorney did not think it advisable."
